Historical note

Following the landmark 1954 Supreme Court case Brown v. Board of Education, which declared segregation in public schools unconstitutional, in 1965 Massachusetts became the first state to legally prohibit racially imbalanced schools. On March 15, 1972, the class action suit Morgan v. Hennigan was filed against the Boston School Committee (BSC) on behalf of fifteen parents and forty-three children, alleging that Boston schools were segregated. Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. ruled against the city and for the parents on June 21, 1974, ordering the BSC to come up with a plan for implementing desegregation. When they failed to come up with an appropriate plan by the deadline in January 1975, the courts took a more active role. Garrity appointed advisors (called masters and experts) to formulate the desegregation plan, which he approved in April. On May 10, 1975 Garrity issued a comprehensive desegregation order that included provisions for citizen participation, monitoring, and reporting. The order created the Citywide Coordinating Council (CCC) as an independent, autonomous oversight body to monitor the implementation of desegregation in Boston Public Schools.

In addition to monitoring implementation on behalf of the court, the CCC was charged with fostering public awareness of the desegregation process; publicizing the Council's recommendations to the public; developing collaborations between colleges, universities, cultural institutions, businesses, and the public schools; identifying and resolving problems through mediation; and bringing unresolved problems to the attention of the plaintiffs, defendants, and court. It was specifically not allowed to "co-manage or make policy for the Boston schools," or to take on any of the School Committee's responsibility for carrying out the court's orders.

Initially, the CCC was composed of forty-two court-appointed volunteers, including black, white, Asian, and Hispanic members, parents from all parts of the city, and people from educational, business, labor, civic, religious, and community organizations, in addition to two members of the Citywide Parents Advisory Council and two students from Racial-Ethnic Student Councils. This number proved unwieldy and was gradually reduced. Arthur Gartland served as the CCC's first chairman, followed by Robert Wood. The CCC was also provided with staff funded by the city, including an executive director, an assistant director, and necessary personnel. Father Michael Groden was the CCC's first executive director, beginning work in July 1975; James P. Breeden joined as deputy director in June 1976 and later became executive director. Frank Harris, S.J., was the assistant staff director.

As the monitoring agent of the court, the CCC held public hearings, trained and coordinated school monitors, inspected school facilities and transportation, arranged school/university pairings, and monitored the desegregation of faculty and staff as well as of students. The Council also investigated bilingual education, occupational/vocational education, and special needs education to see if all students' needs were being met. They submitted frequent reports to the court, and commissioned numerous reports and statistical analyses to assess the progress of integration. In its campaign to spread public awareness of implementation, the CCC distributed press releases and established an information center that responded to public inquiries and held a reference library open to the public.

Beginning in May 1977, the court began to plan its withdrawal and ordered the creation of a permanent Department of Implementation to carry out the desegregation plan. The Department of Implementation took over the CCC's responsibility for coordinating monitors in September 1977. In July 1978, CCC

Chairman Robert Woods stepped down to become Superintendent of Boston Public Schools. The CCC was formally disbanded on September 1, 1978.

Scope and Contents

The Citywide Coordinating Council (CCC) records consist of the documents created and compiled by the CCC during their oversight of the desegregation process in Boston Public Schools, 1975-1978. These records document the activities of the CCC, its staff, and its many subcommittees and organizations, as well as school segregation more generally. Materials in this collection include clippings, correspondence, court documents, budget materials, hearing transcripts, minutes, monitoring forms, newsletters, questionnaires, reports on desegregation, statistical analyses, and a large number of publications from the CCC's Resource Center. Some materials, particularly court documents and information on desegregation in other communities, date prior to the formation of the CCC.

The CCC's central files document the formation and functions of the CCC, its subcommittees, and connections to other Boston public school organizations. This series is primarily composed of reference and administrative task files, which reflect the original file plan and work processes of the CCC's staff. Subjects covered include bilingual education, Boston School Committee and Boston School Department activities, educational and pairing programs, desegregation issues, and monitoring. Boston Public Schools annual reports, correspondence, court documents, minutes, newspaper clippings, reports, and statistical analyses are all included in this series, which makes up the bulk of the collection.

The Resource Center provided information to the public about navigating the desegregation process in the Boston area and about desegregation generally. The Resource Center records consist mainly of publications and printed material, along with subject files and the center's administrative records. Included in these resources is information relating to the Code of Discipline, the system budget, district-specific information, and student assignments and transfers. The Resource Center also had a hotline, and these records include a small number of hotline call logs.

Senior staff records are the working files of executive staff directors Father Michael Groden and his successor James P. Breeden, as well as those of assistant staff director Frank Harris, S.J.. Other staff records are those of the office's assistants. This series documents desegregation activities undertaken by the CCC, as well as general office and operational matters.

Subseries C: Boston School Committee, 1975-1978

Scope and Contents

The Boston School Committee was a five-person elected group that administered Boston Public Schools. The BSC carried out a variety of desegregation measures and improvements to the educational system, receiving input on their execution from the court, the CCC, and other stakeholders including faculty and staff, parents, and students. Frequently the committee received testimony from individuals or groups, which is reflected in meeting minutes. The BSC is headed by a chairperson. Three chairs oversaw the committee during this period: John McDonough, 1975-1976; Kathleen Sullivan, 1977; and David Finnegan, 1978-1979.

The BSC minutes touch on a number of subjects regarding the Boston Public Schools' desegregation process, including information about area educational organizations; budget issues; contract negotiations with faculty and staff unions; complaints and testimony from students, parents, and faculty; facilities concerns; school assignments and transfers; and sports budgets. Votes mainly consist of orders related to personnel matters, contracts, and ESAA-funded hires. The series begins with the BSC meeting minutes, listed in chronological order, followed by subject files in alphabetical order.

Subseries J: Educational programs, 1974-1978

Scope and Contents

Court orders mandated improved education in Boston's schools alongside desegregation. Improved educational opportunities were part of the CCC's duties, reflected in its initial Educational Programs Subcommittee. A number of programs fell into this category, including pairings, Chapter 636, and Circular 33 programs. Pairings were court-monitored relationships between local agencies and institutions of higher learning on one side and a local school or, at times, an entire school district on the other. Chapter 636 helped schools and districts fund special education, diversity education, or other related programs. Circular 33, named after Superintendent's Circular, No. 33, published October 10, 1975, encouraged programs that addressed five Boston-wide educational priorities: basic skills, special needs, bilingual and multicultural education, career education, and democracy.

Files are arranged alphabetically by funding source, then external institution and/or Boston school. The various avenues for supplementary educational funding were used in concert frequently, so overlap exists on many projects. Specific programs make up the bulk of the subseries, with a small amount of additional background information on the programs, their funding, and progress reports. Additional information about pairings projects may also be found under the name of the school in other subseries, particularly in the case of magnet schools.

Subseries K: Minutes and reports, 1970-1978

Scope and Contents

CCC Meeting minutes, meeting materials, and commissioned reports are arranged in three sub-subseries: 1. Administrative records; 2. Meeting minutes and materials; and 3. Reports and public hearings summaries. Administrative records are organized alphabetically, and include meeting reminders, memos, directories, rosters of CCC members, as well as the by-laws of the Citywide Coordinating Council. The meeting minutes and materials sub-subseries contains a series of information packets containing agendas, minutes, and documents discussed during meetings, as well as meeting minutes of several CCC subcommittees and minutes not included in information packets. Information packets are arranged chronologically, while subcommittee minutes and general minutes are arranged alphabetically following the packets. Reports conducted and commissioned by the CCC are arranged alphabetically and include the organization's annual reports as well as those submitted to the CCC by academics and institutions. Summaries of the CCC's public hearings and related memos on various desegregation topics have also been included in this sub-subseries.

Scope and Contents

In 1975, a three-tiered citizen's participation group for school desegregation was established. Two branches, the Community District Advisory Council (CDAC) and Citywide Parent Advisory Council (CPAC), were primarily responsible for monitoring district schools for compliance with desegregation orders. Volunteer observers from these groups evaluated schools in several areas outlined by the court: faculty desegregation; special desegregation measures; special services (special education programs organized under chapter 766); bilingual education; vocational education; transportation; facilities; safety and security; and institutional pairings.

Monitoring records are arranged in two sub-subseries: 1. Administration records; and 2. Monitor reports. The administration records are composed of CDAC and CPAC progress reports, planning, training, and staffing materials, as well as meeting minutes, memorandums, and correspondence regarding specific types of monitoring and monitoring at specific Boston area schools records arranged alphabetically and chronologically. The monitor reports, consisting of questionnaires completed by CDAC and CPAC observers, school administrators, and students, have been arranged to reflect three original filing systems used by the nine CDAC advisory groups. The bulk of these materials are arranged by school district number (1-9) and alphabetically by type of report. Reports were also identified by type of report alone and by individual school. These reports are arranged alphabetically and chronologically following the materials by district.

Subseries M: Public relations and newspaper clippings, 1975-1978

Scope and Contents

The public relations and newspaper clippings subseries is composed of the operational files of the CCC's office of public relations, collected newsletters and publications on general desegregation issues, and a large number of clippings regarding school desegregation in Boston and the desegregation activities of the CCC. The operational files of the office of public relations include press releases, correspondence with the public and local media outlets, as well as materials from the ad hoc committee on public information.

This series is arranged in three sub-subseries: 1. Administration records; 2. Newsletters and other publications; and 3. Newspaper clippings. The administration records and newsletters and other publications sub-subseries are arranged alphabetically and chronologically. Maintaining the original order imposed by the staff of the public relations department of the CCC, the materials in the newspaper clippings sub-subseries have been arranged first chronologically, followed by subject files arranged alphabetically.

Series III: Senior staff records, 1970-1979

Scope and Contents

The records in this series are composed of the operational files belonging to three of the CCC's senior staff members. The executive director's records were created by both Father Michael Groden, who served as the organization's first executive director, and James P. Breeden, who later succeeded him. Frank Harris, S.J., served as assistant staff director. The files of a fourth individual, possibly an assistant to Breeden, have been included in this series as other staff records. Materials in this series cover the breadth of desegregation activities undertaken by the CCC, as well as general office and operational matters.

This series is arranged in three subseries: A. Assistant staff director records; B. Executive staff director records; and C. Other staff records. The original order of both the assistant staff director and executive staff director records has been maintained, and are arranged alphabetically and chronologically. The other staff records are also arranged alphabetically and chronologically. Some faculty, staff, and student materials are closed due to privacy restrictions. Please consult the Archivist about using these documents.
